II. Background Information

Troop M, 1st New York Cavalry, was organized on March 21, 1914, at Avon, Livingston County, New York. At this time, each state managed its own militia, and the National Guard would be formed several years later. James W. Wadsworth, Jr., of Geneseo, was chosen Troop M's lieutenant under Capt. Nathan C. Shiverick of Avon. Troop M was housed at Ashantee, Herbert and Martha (Blow) Wadsworth's home in Avon, where stables, an armory, and a riding arena were erected.

After about two years of training, Troop M was summoned into federal service on the Mexican border from July 8, 1916, to March 12, 1917. Capt. Shiverick resigned just before their return, and 2nd Lieutenant Dallas Newton was made commander.

Soon after their return, Troop M was sent to Spartanburg, South Carolina, to train in preparation for deployment during World War I. Troop M, assigned to the 27th Division at Camp Wadsworth, SC, was split into the 104th and 105th Machine Gun Battalions and the 102nd Ammunition Train. On March 7, 1918, while the unit was absent from Avon, the stables and storehouse at Ashantee burned, leaving only the riding hall. Upon return to Livingston County, Capt. James S. Wadsworth took command and a new armory was built on the northern edge of the village of Geneseo.

On May 1, 1920, the federal government recognized Troop M as the 1st Cavalry of the New York National Guard, with Capt. Perry Euchner commanding. September 1927 saw the troop ride to Cuylerville to participate in the dedication of the Boyd and Parker Memorial.

In 1928, Troop M underwent a new designation as Troop G, 121st Cavalry, and then the next year as Troop I, 121st Cavalry, New York National Guard. In 1930, the first Cavalry Circus was performed, becoming an anticipated annual event for several years and further solidifying the troop's important influence on the town and area. During the Great Depression, it was said that a number of families relied on the income that employment at the armory guaranteed.

In January 1941, the 121st Cavalry retained its duties but disbanded and subsequently reorganized as Troop B, 101st Cavalry (Horse and Mechanized) Regiment, NYNG, as they mobilized for service in World War II. Only planning on training for one year, the troop saw almost five years of service, primarily in France and Germany. By 1943, they formed the basis of Troop E, Company F, 101st Cavalry Reconnaissance Squadron.

During the war, Company I, 21st Infantry Regiment, NYNG inhabited the Geneseo Armory and was known briefly as the "Home Guard" until the troops returned from service overseas. Company I, 21st Infantry Regiment, NYNG, reorganized several times. First, as the 27th Mechanized Cavalry Reconnaissance Troop, then the 27th Reconnaissance Company in 1948, and finally Company A of the 27th Reconnaissance Battalion in 1955. It was redesignated in 1959 as Troop A, 1st Reconnaissance Squadron, 121st Armor of the 27th Armored Division.

Through all the reorganizations, Troop M and subsequent iterations won awards in rifle marksmanship in 1927-1930 and recognition as one of the best units in the state. It was also lauded for community participation in celebrations, dedications, sports, parades, riding events, and for furnishing horses for local riding classes.

The formation of this militia in the Genesee Valley is significant given the long history of horse breeding, riding, and fox hunting in the region. The Wadsworth family, longtime residents of Geneseo, New York, were prominent in equine, civic, and military affairs; James W. Wadsworth, Jr., may have had influence in the state's choice to authorize a cavalry troop in the Genesee Valley. Especially after the unit was relocated to Geneseo, the pride in the valley's equine history and capable cavalry was evident. The organization of such a unit at Geneseo is notable, as all other cavalry troops in the state were located at large cities after World War I, and Geneseo's armory was a point of both military and community pride.
