II. Biographical and Background Information

Alice Burdick (1931-2023), the donor of the collection, formerly lived at 37 West Avenue (formerly Canal Street) in the village of Dansville, Livingston County, New York. According to local legend, the property is said to have had a connection with the Underground Railroad. This detail, along with its unique architectural features and the prominence of its past tenants, inspired Ms. Burdick to pursue listing the house on the National Register of Historic Places. This collection comprises her research for that project. The collection mostly comprised handwritten notes and research journals, and as part of processing the collection, the Livingston County Historian's Office compiled the notes into transcribed PDFs.

Although it is not documented that the property had connections with the Underground Railroad, it can be confirmed that the prominent Faulkner family resided in the home. Dr. James Faulkner was the nephew of Daniel P. Faulkner, for whom the town of Dansville is named. Although it is uncertain who first built and resided at the home on West Avenue, Dr. Faulkner and his family lived in that area from the mid-1800s to the early 1900s. They were deeply involved in the development of Dansville and owned many of the mills and other production yards that operated along the Genesee Valley Canal that ran through the village.
